Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a system that is particularly adapted to detect a patient's incorrect patient positioning. The present invention may be used for detecting a patient in a medical examination or a medical treatment by monitoring the patient's respiration. In particular, the present invention is especially useful for detection of a patient's incorrect patient positioning during the execution of a radiotherapy treatment. 2. Brief Description of the Related Art In the context of medical treatment or examination, incorrect patient positioning is the most common error. A patient may be incorrectly positioned with respect to a radiotherapy treatment machine, possibly because a medical apparatus in the vicinity of the patient, or even the patient itself, is not adapted to the patient's dimensions. In the art, radiotherapy treatments are generally performed using a radiotherapy machine having an X-ray tube, on which is located a patient support. The patient is then placed on the patient support with a correct patient positioning. After irradiation, the patient's correct position is checked, in particular to ensure that the radiation beam has been correctly targeted in an anatomical region. For this purpose, the collimator of the X-ray tube is realigned with respect to an examination camera. In this context, misalignment of the X-ray tube and the patient support is particularly detrimental for an entire treatment, because the patient, due to its incorrect position, is subjected to f678ea9f9e
